Synopsis

An interprofessional primary care team is often the first point of professional contact for survivors or victims of gender-based violence (GBV) worldwide. There is scarcity of trained and sensitized interprofessional team who is supportive, non-judgmental and responsive to GBV survivors. This one-hour workshop will benefit students, primary health care providers and social activists through well-designed engaging strategies. Participants will reflect on the attitudes and ineffective skills of health care team, and learn how to support professionally to the traumatic experience of violence against women and girls’ at primary care level.

Learning Outcomes

- Understand the importance of trained interprofessional care team to provide support to GBV survivors at primary care level in one’s context
- Learn 5 steps of LIVES –WHO guidebook to provide psychosocial support at first point of care
